	5.4	Organizational chart and processes The combination of organizational structure and process shapes college behavior. The college organizational structure is comprising of all types key authority structures, including a Governing Council, a Chairman, a cohort of administrative leaders, and an Academic Council. Organizational processes are defined in terms of a set of outcomes, the generic activities and tasks needed to achieve the outcomes. This process captures what needs to be done to deliver the product within the process. The components of organizational structure are: departmentalization, chain of command, and span of control, centralization or decentralization, work specialization and the degree of formalization.

Each of these elements affects how workers engage with each other, management and their jobs in order to achieve the employer's goals.

The college follows the “Top to Bottom” and “Bottom to Top” work flow hierarchy in both administrative and academic activities. All the activities are governed and regulated by the highest bodies like Academic and Governing Councils.

All the internal activities are regularly monitored by various departmental boards and IQAC.
